

TEDxSoweto 2014: Silver Linings

Issued by Omico

18 Nov 2014

TedxSoweto's fifth edition, titled "Silver Linings", takes place at the Soweto Theatre on Saturday, 22 November 2014, and will celebrate some of the strides that South Africa and the rest of the continent have made in technology and business. Despite many challenges, divergent players have worked together to improve Africa.

Featuring business insights from Victor Kgomoewana, trends from Pierre du Plessis, technology guru Gustav Praekelt's work that reaches 50 million in sub-Saharan Africa and many others, "Silver Linings" will showcase what it means to be an African today.

South African society in particular is going through testing times, where the country's legacy often rears its head to test cohesion between citizens. News headlines point to a political climate that is under constant scrutiny and the youth, who are the country's largest and fastest growing part of the population, live at the cutting-edge of technology and often make mention of being uncertain about their economic independence.

While acknowledging the challenges, the strides that South Africa has made in its twenty years of democracy can certainly not be ignored. The digital revolution will continue to empower the youth in ways that will make democracy more accessible to people. New technologies, though sometimes met with resistance, will shift more power into the hands of ordinary people. Change is happening more rapidly than ever before. The future unfolds at such a rate that it can be missed in a blink.
