

French journalist Dubois freed in Mali

By Lucien Libert, Elizabeth Pineau, John Irish, GV De Clercq and Kevin Liffey

22 Mar 2023

French journalist Olivier Dubois, who has been held hostage in Mali for nearly two years, has been freed, newspaper Liberation's director told Reuters on Monday.

Source: unsplash.com

Dubois, who disappeared in Mali's northern city of Gao in April 2021, appeared in a video in early May 2022, appealing to authorities to do everything they could to free him from Islamist militants holding him.

"We are deeply relieved and happy about this outcome," Liberation director Dov Alfon said.

Dubois worked for Liberation and Le Point magazine.

France's foreign ministry did not immediately confirm the news of his release.

Reporters from independent Egyptian news outlet referred to trial

Aidan Lewis, Marguerita Choy 1 Mar 2023

French civilians have long been favoured targets for kidnapping by criminal and Islamist groups in West Africa's arid Sahel region, partly because of perceptions that the French government is prepared to pay ransoms to secure their release.

France has repeatedly denied paying ransoms for hostages.

Islamist militants have repeatedly declared French citizens in West Africa to be targets since a 2013 military intervention by France drove back al-Qaeda-linked groups that had seized cities and towns in northern Mali a year earlier.

ABOUT THE AUTHOR

Reporting by Lucien Libert, Elizabeth Pneau and John Irish, writing by GV De Clercq; Editing by Kevin Liffey

For more, visit: <https://www.bizcommunity.com>