As the local tourism and travel industry tentatively opens up South Africans can start venturing out of 'house arrest' and help boost our struggling tourism industry by escaping to remote and secluded accommodation options across the country.

One such secluded escape is Cape Summer Villa's Spanish Farm Guest Lodge in Somerset West in Cape Town. Situated on a four-hectare estate, the boutique lodge offers various self-catering accommodation options, from the private cottage to stand-alone two-bedroom villas.

The villas boast two stories of slick modern design, fully-equipped kitchens, wood-burning fireplaces, en-suite bedrooms, under-floor heating, outdoor showers, natural water plunge pools and the most stunning views of False Bay upon generous terraces.

What more do you need?

The estate also houses a chicken farm, vegetable garden and roaming springboks amongst its indigenous gardens, which burst with beautiful fynbos and abundant birdlife.

An absolute highlight of a recent stay at one of the two-bedroom villas was a breathtaking dip in the natural water plunge pool followed by a steaming hot shower in the jungly outdoor shower area amongst gentle rain and tweeting birds. So restorative!
