

10-year global study notes African surge in giving

Despite a downward trend in donations in some of the world's wealthiest places, large swathes of the African continent are defying the trend. This is according to a Charities Aid Foundation (CAF) 10-year-study of global giving that surveyed 1.3 million people.

Image source: Gallo/Getty

The Charities Aid Foundation \(CAF\) World Giving Index 10th edition report examined aggregate data for each country across 10 years (2009-2018), drawing on surveys in 128 countries in order to capture longer term trends. In each case, respondents were asked if they had helped a stranger, donated money or volunteered their time in the weeks prior to being surveyed each year over the decade.

The report identified the 10 most generous countries over the decade of research, along with the 10 least generous. It also lists the biggest risers over the course of the study and those countries that have dropped the most during that time.

Downward trend in key countries

But despite the scale of generosity, the report also identifies a recent downward trend in donations in key countries with long histories of philanthropy and household charitable giving, including the USA, Canada, the United Kingdom, Ireland and the Netherlands where levels of individual giving are now lower than they were in the aftermath of the financial crisis.

Three out of the top 10 most improved countries over the course of the study are in Africa; Kenya came second, South Africa is sixth and Rwanda is eighth.

In Kenya, more than half of people donated money to charity in 2018, a significant jump from less than a third in the 2010 edition of the World Giving Index. In South Africa, the three measures asked all increased over the course of the decade, with the region posting world-leading numbers of people helping a stranger.

The only country in Africa on the list of biggest fallers is Morocco and, as a continent, despite considerable times of strife and hardship in several countries, the region proved to be resilient in its willingness to give over the course of the decade.

Risers and fallers

▲ BIGGEST RISERS

- 1 Indonesia
- 2 Kenya
- 3 Singapore
- 4 Malaysia
- 5 Iraq
- 6 South Africa
- 7 Haiti
- 8 Rwanda
- 9 Bosnia and Herzegovina
- 10 United Arab Emirates

- 10 Poland
- 9 Turkmenistan
- 8 Philippines
- 7 Latvia
- 6 Czech Republic
- 5 Azerbaijan
- 4 Mauritania
- 3 Cambodia
- 2 Afghanistan
- 1 Morocco

▼ BIGGEST FALLERS

Lowest scoring countries over 10 years (aggregate)

#GivingTuesday

This year's examination of a decade of giving is being released in the lead up to #GivingTuesday – 3 December – the global day of giving that follows Black Friday and Cyber Monday and encourages people to give their time, money or voice to a good cause.

Other key findings:

- Worldwide, more than 2.5 billion people helped a stranger over the past decade, with African countries accounting for seven of the top 10 places where people are most likely to do so.

- Seven of the 10 most generous countries are among the world's wealthiest but the top 10 list also includes less affluent nations such as Myanmar, Sri Lanka and Indonesia.
- New Zealand (third place) is the only country that appears in the top 10 of all three measures of the survey, helping a stranger, volunteering and giving money to a good cause in the past month.
- Half of the countries that have risen the most in the World Giving Index are from Asia.
- People from Myanmar are the most likely to have donated money to charity. (Practising Buddhists account for 90% of the population, 99% of them followers of the Theravada branch of the religion which mandates giving).
- Globally, nearly 20% of all adults volunteer with Sri Lanka reporting the highest rate of volunteering in the world.

John Low, chief executive of the Charities Aid Foundation, an international charity which helps people and companies to give worldwide, said: “We are once again reminded of the kindness and generosity of people across the world as they dig deep despite uncertain times and significant geo-political unrest to give their time and money to help others.

“In taking a step back and looking at giving trends over 10 years, we have created what we hope will serve as a roadmap to continue to grow giving in all its forms across the globe. There are areas of concern, but also key moments of hope in parts of the world that have overcome true hardship.

“We know that there is no single solution to success. It is about hard work, shared values and knowing in ourselves the inherent benefit to all of us when we work to improve the lives of our friends and neighbours, and strangers who need our help.”

Gill Bates, chief executive of Charities Aid Foundation Southern Africa (CAFSA), said: “We are very pleased to see such resilience in the levels of generosity, not just among South Africa and our near neighbours, but across this entire, vibrant continent. We are a complex region with very diverse economies, but it is gratifying to know that people across this vast continent are willing to lend a hand to those in need.”