Called the Global Marketing Effectiveness Bootcamp, this 10-week course will be conducted across three regions: Americas, Asia Pacific, Europe/Middle East/Africa. The Bootcamp will give participants the chance to learn directly from organisations including IBM, Unilever and VMLY&R. They are sponsored by Facebook Blueprint, in a partnership which will see some of the e-learning platform's digital marketing content included in the Bootcamps curriculum.

Bootcamps cover how to achieve effective marketing initiatives, as well as theory-based learning, and will provide opportunities for peer networking. Participants apply their new skills to an independent project relevant to their business, such as a product launch or marketing initiative, with support from an industry mentor. This project will be evaluated by at least three professional marketers serving as Effie Mentors to earn the Effie Marketing Effectiveness Certificate.

Each Bootcamp runs for 10 weeks with workshops conducted via Zoom. They are available in major markets worldwide, starting in the Americas (Oct 13-15, 19-21), followed by Asia Pacific (Nov 11, 12 & 16-19) and then EMEA (Dec 9, 10, 14-17). Content is aimed at professionals with an average of five years' industry experience.

Participating brands present a brief to student teams, who then use Effie’s framework for marketing effectiveness to research, ideate and executive marketing strategies to address professional-level marketing challenges.

In the US, brands that have participated in the Effie Collegiate program have included IBM, Target, Heineken, Kleenex and Subaru, among others.

Effie Worldwide also conducts customised Marketing Effectiveness Evaluator courses, interactive learning sessions, for brand teams that are tailored to every level of professional development, from entry-level to C-suite. Previous participants include P&G, Dentsu, Google and Walmart, among others.
