Berlin Panorama opening film Flatland; SAFTA Best Soap nominee Arendsvlei; and Covid-19 lockdown doc United Apart SA

FLATLAND | Stream now

Flatland opened the 2019 Berlin Panorama, selling out all its screenings, and has a 91% critics rating on Rotten Tomatoes, with Variety calling the South African film "an exhilarating fusion of contemporary western and girls-gone-wild road movie" and praising "the film's sensational trio of female leads": Faith Baloyi (Blood Psalms), Nicole Fortuin (Indemnity) and Izel Bezuidenhout (Dis Ek, Anna).

When her disastrous wedding night ends in a murder, Natalie (Fortuin) flees across the desolate Karoo on horseback with her heavily pregnant best friend Poppie (Bezuidenhout). Hot on their trail is Captain Beauty Cuba (Baloyi), a lonely policewoman intent on proving the innocence of her long-lost fiancé (SAFTA winner Brendon Daniels from Skemerdans and Four Corners), who has been framed for Natalie's crime.

The third feature from multi-award-winning South African director Jenna Cato Bass (High Fantasy, Love the One You Love, co-writer on Rafiki), Flatland also screened in the Contemporary World Cinema selection at Toronto International Film Festival.

"I have long wanted to make a western set in the Karoo, an endless wilderness of semi-desert dotted with small towns, boiling in summer and freezing in winter, near mythical," says Bass. "I love the drama, action and locations of the traditional western. The unwritten rule of westerns is, however, that they are for men and by men. Though I loved Westerns as much as my father did, I couldn't identify with them. I knew Clint Eastwood would survive, but what about me? What would I do, shot at by enemies, alone? I wanted adventure for myself and for others who were ignored by these films. So Flatland is the opposite – it's a feminist post-western. The main characters are women, each one of them raw and authentic

At The Royalty Soapie Awards, Arendsvlei is nominated for Most Popular Show, while Jolene Martin (Beatrice Abrahams) and Clayton Evertson (Jake Sylvester) are up for Outstanding Couple and Viewers' Choice awards for Best Actress and Actor respectively. As Dorothy Galant, Ilse Klink is also nominated for both Outstanding Female Villain and Best Actress, while Quanita Adams is up for Viewers' Choice: Best Actress and Outstanding Supporting Actress as Laetitia. For his breakthrough role as Kaleb Jakobs, Chad Baai is up for not just Outstanding Newcomer but Viewers' Choice: Best Actor too.

DOIN' MY DRUGS | Stream now, first on Showmax

Thomas Buttenschøn was born HIV+ in Zambia in 1985 to a Zambian mother and Danish father. By the time he was nine, he had lost both his parents to the disease. Now in his mid 30s, he's a household name in Denmark, as an award-winning musician and former judge of Denmark's Got Talent.

Shot over two-and-a-half years, Tyler Q Rosen's documentary feature Doin' My Drugs follows Thomas as he returns to Zambia as living proof that HIV/Aids is not a death sentence. "I have two healthy children. I am healthy. I have a healthy wife. I cannot infect them because I am properly medicated," says Thomas. "It is obvious to everyone that if all the infected were well medicated, like me, we would be able to eradicate HIV. Full stop."

But in Zambia, despite government initiatives to make antiretrovirals available for free, there is much work to be done. The documentary follows Thomas as he organises a concert with Zambian stars like Maiko Zulu, Danny Kaya, John Chiti, Afunika, and B Flow - where free tickets are offered in return for HIV tests.

An official selection at CPH: Dox, *Doin' My Drug*s has been hailed as "polished" and "engrossing" by Boston Globe; "inspiring" by Filmthreat; and "powerful" and "timely" by Film Juice.

"My parents will never come back, but if they are sitting up there watching, I hope they can see that I'm doing everything I can to get the sh*t stopped," Thomas says.
